“Salonga Partnership Coordinator”

The World Wide Fund for Nature (WWF) has embarked on ambitious, field-based conservation programs across the Congo Basin. In the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC), WWF is active in several landscape-scale sites, including the over 7 million ha Salonga landscape, encompassing Salonga National Park (SNP), the third largest tropical forest park in the world, a UNESCO World Heritage site since 1984, and a critical refuge for bonobos and forest elephants. The landscape program also works in peripheral communities and with communities situated within park boundaries. In addition to its importance for biodiversity conservation, this humid forest region is of significant importance for carbon storage and maintaining water supplies. The program takes an integrated conservation approach with a consortium of NGO, government, community, private sector, and academic partners. Key conservation strategies include: protected area management; land use planning; law enforcement and species conservation; human rights and community-based natural resources management and livelihood improvement.

Effective protected area management is a cornerstone of WWF’s conservation efforts in the DRC, in close partnership with ICCN (Institut Congolais pour la Conservation de la Nature), the national protected area management authority. New, creative ways are needed to effectively manage protected areas in challenging social, economic, cultural, and logistical environments. WWF and ICCN have agreed to implement an innovative form of Public Private Partnership management approach in forms of co-management to professionalise the management of the park while also improving the life standards of communities living in the landscape as well as their participation in the governance of natural resources.
